

The {Chatroom} & The {Dollhouse} is a hybrid exhibition currently on view at SomoS Arts in Berlin, bringing together 29 artists across digital and physical spaces. Presented by the collective Babytooth, in collaboration with SomoS Arts, the project explores avatars, internet subcultures, and the performative nature of online identity through a selection of artworks, installations, and interactive elements. The project is part of The Wrong Biennale and was selected for the Vorspiel programme of 2026.

Conceptual overview

The {Dollhouse} [thedoll.house] exists online, hosting what can be described as chronically online aesthetics. The {Chatroom} is where internet culture spills into physical space. If you are reading this, you are standing right in it. Welcome to the {Chatroom}. In both this exhibition and online vernacular, the {Chatroom} is staged as a non-physical space that cannot be represented literally; it is instead translated into a self-referential myth engine. This online space is usually explored from the bedroom from which one posts. The bedroom then acts as a proxy for cyberspace and functions as a heterotopia. A world within a world where we curate images of ourselves and share them with an audience we may or may not know. By existing here, we create avatars: extensions of ourselves in digital form. These avatars can be accompanied by objects that can be collected or worn: trinkets, charms, or chatelaines which acquire sentimental value over time and have the potential to become heirlooms.

While all avatars and their extensions are tools of individual expression, recurring stylistic devices reveal patterns about the current state of contemporary internet subcultural identity. What archetype will you pick? Angel, doll, puppet, anime character, mystical creature... or hybrids of these forms? Winged, armed, big, small? Cute or scary... or something in between?

Avatars range from embodied to ideal. Do you float in enclosed spaces, roam horizonless plains, or appear pixelated, blurry, compromised, compressed, or imported from elsewhere? In this exhibition, these images are existential markers in a space where irony to sincerity is explored on a spectrum. We find pseudo-religious imagery, symbols of innocence, signs of the divine, and apparitions amidst streams of disturbing content. These images reflect a yearning for meaning and purpose, a contemporary spirituality formed online.

The act of creating and watching avatars is performative: a contemporary Looking-Glass Self. Between {Dollhouse} and {Chatroom}, we offer ourselves to consume, actors performing, gooners watching, sometimes fetish-like, sometimes playful, always revealing. Now, a new presence multiplies online... for lack of a better word, we've labeled it "AI." It operates through the same systems as humans, raising questions about how it uses us, is used by us, and how it hides itself.

About Babytooth

Babytooth is an art collective and curatorial project. A location-independent platform hosting exhibitions and events worldwide, it creates a flexible, in-between space and cultural lab exploring the balance between sincerity and irony. Babytooth aims to provide a third space where experimentation, community, and creative exchange coexist. Their first effort The {Chatroom} & The {Dollhouse} is a hybrid project consisting of two parts and was presented as part of the Wrong Biennale. The first part, an online exhibition called [thedoll.house], was made physically interactive through a tabletop game, Exit the {Dollhouse}, designed by Babytooth and hosted at SomoS on January 29th as part of a participatory game night within Vorspiel 2026, a citywide programme connecting initiatives around the transmediale and CTM festivals.

Finissage & Game Night

In conjunction with the exhibition, the finissage will feature a participatory game night centered around Exit the {Dollhouse}, a tabletop game designed by Babytooth. Expanding the exhibition's exploration of avatars, internet subcultures, and performative online identities, the game invites visitors to collectively navigate the fictional world of the {Dollhouse}.

Curator-led tours of the exhibition are also available upon request.
